ADAM GIBSON DESIGN of Carmel, Indiana designated an Ambassador for the Living in Place Institute

CARMEL, IN – Adam Gibson Design announces that Adam Gibson has been designated as an Ambassador for the Living in Place Institute, an organization focused solely upon education and awareness of home accessibility and safety. Gibson, a forward-leaning architectural designer and consultant, was chosen by the Living in Place Institute for his dedication to thoughtful safety and health concerns in his designs.

“The Living in Place Institute addresses uniqueness and teaches the tools that help designers think outside the box and create solutions for each client,” says Gibson, who has been an architectural designer for over twenty years. “Their philosophy revolves around the individual client, which resonates with me. I am honored to be one of their Ambassadors.”

Living in Place includes preventive measures for those who wish to remain in their homes indefinitely and prescribes solutions for scenarios that may arise during someone’s lifetime. Some individuals wish to live in their home permanently, others may have special needs of various types.

The result is a set of guidelines for the accommodation of carefully thought-out safety measures that can be flawlessly incorporated into the design for a home or a remodel. This enables features to be “hiding in plain sight” without disruption of aesthetic. And a safer home is a healthier home.

“Adam Gibson is an asset to the Living in Place community,” says Erik Listou, Co-Founder of the Living in Place Institute. “His experience in architectural design of luxury homes places him in a unique category. Adding his dedication and passion for the detailed inclusion of health and safety elements, we are thrilled to have him on our team.”

Living in Place is the only positive solution to all homes accessible, comfortable, and safe for everyone, through education and collaborative networking events.
